LIBRARY LECTURE 1

DREAMING OF THE BELOVED:

Heloise in literature from the 18th century to the present

Constant Mews

with readings and singing by
Maryna Mews

Tuesday 28 March

7 – 9 pm

Why has the figure of Heloise generated such interest since the 18th century?

This presentation explores the range of ways she has been imagined in English literature, beginning with an enormously popular translation by John Hughes in 1713. This was followed by Alexander Pope's Eloisa to Abelard, a poem widely imitated in the eighteenth century. The paper looks at how poets and novelists have perceived Heloise as one who, within the constraints of religious life, dreams about her lover, Peter Abelard. The talk concludes by looking at various 20th-century presentations of Heloise in literature, notably by Helen Waddell as well as some more recent efforts.

After extensive study and teaching abroad Constant Mews came to Monash University in 1987. He has published widely on medieval thought and religious life, with particular attention to Peter Abelard and Heloise, and their contemporaries, notably The Lost Love Letters of Heloise and Abelard, 2nd edn (Palgrave Macmillan 2008) and Abelard and Heloise (Oxford University Press, 2005). He is currently working on a history of scholastic thought. Maryna Mews is Constant's muse and also a freelance editor and singer.

The Testament of Mary – Colm Toibin

Pamela Robe as Mary

Conversation with Pamela Robe to follow the performance

“This Mary is unrecognizable from the meek, obedient woman of scripture, painting and sculpture, she is angry, sharp witted and dares to speak a dangerous truth.

Mary invites the audience to join in her defiance, to examine how myths are made and to question who has the power to tell them”
